- London Consortium (formerly North London Girls' Consortium)

The Consortium is split into two groups (listed below). A girl will only have to sit one exam for all schools she has applied to in that group. She is then allowed to sit that exam at any of the schools in the group, so long as it's one that she has applied to. Since the exam paper is shared with all of her schools, they use the same mark scheme, and it doesn't make a difference which school she chooses to sit at. Usually, her prep school will help her decide, but parents may also choose and contact the relevant school for more details. If a girl applies to schools in both groups, she will have to sit two exams.
